
Este programa internacional está dirigido por un equipo franco-brasileño de investigadores en Ciencias Humanas, Ciencias Sociales, Artes y Literatura. Su objetivo es la realización de una plataforma virtual de historia cultural transatlántica, editada en cuatro idiomas, y que analice las dinámicas del espacio atlántico para comprender su rol en el proceso de mundialización contemporánea. A través de una serie de ensayos sobre las relaciones culturales entre Europa, África y las Américas; el programa enfatiza la historia conectada del espacio atlántico desde el siglo XVIII.

Sport

Fabien Archambault - Université Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne

Atlántico Sur - Atlántico Norte - África - Europa - Caribe - América del Sur - América del Norte

Considered from the point of view of sport during a long twentieth century, the Atlantic space shows multiple circulations of practices born in specific contexts (soccer or cricket in Victorian England, basketball or baseball in the United States), their successful or unsuccessful transplants, as well as their effects on the receiving societies.

Throughout the twentieth century, sport in the Atlantic area was shaped by the interaction between four sub-ensembles, each with its own specificities: Europe, Africa, North America and Latin America. A quadrangular trade developed in the last third of the nineteenth century, involving transfers, counter-transfers and cultural imperialism practices, and producing boomerang effects along with acclimatization, adaptation and reformulation processes. These movements generated a constant flow of practices, representations and people. This phenomenon can be approached from various angles: first from the perspective of source societies; secondly by considering each sport individually; and finally by looking at the issues, mechanics and processes of circulation.

From the perspective of the societies that have produced new sporting practices—Victorian England with football, rugby, cricket, boxing and polo; the USA with basketball, volley-ball and baseball; and Europe in general with the Olympic movement—one could analyze the causes and means of a form of cultural imperialism that was never voluntaristic (or at least, as far as the former two countries are concerned). This analysis could examine the conditions under which a sport can be grafted into diverse spaces and contexts (pre- and post-independence Africa, Latin America under the British rule and later the US rule, the Caribbean, the US in their emancipation from British cultural domination in the nineteenth century, Europe in the aftermath of both World Wars), and under diverse mechanisms of domination (the settlement of populations, colonial exploitation, informal empires, areas of influence), also considering both the endogenous and exogenous factors affecting the "sportivization" of societies, as well as the consequences of such imports on host societies. This approach draws upon categories such as colonization, imperialism, cultural and ideological hegemony, acculturation, cultural resistance, the construction of national and continental identities, etc.

An approach considering each sport individually partly repeats the considerations outlined above, but its merit rests in its ability to deliver more detailed studies focusing on specific spaces and characters. For instance, the very particular case of the development of cricket in the West Indies provides an example of an original reformulation of the game, which has produced abundant and important scholarship by the tenants of Black emancipation (including Cyril Lionel Robert James). The same applies to the development of this sport in India, under the legacy of indenture. Some major figures, illustrating the many facets of a new triangular trade, also provide key objects for research: for instance Pelé (from the Santos football club to the New York Cosmos, through to the 1958 Swedish World Cup), as well as boxer Muhammad Ali or basket-ball player Michael Jordan.

Finally, by tackling these transatlantic flows through the prism of their stakes and mechanisms, one can highlight medium-term timescales and re-situate the analysis within an economic and political context that has an influence on these processes. In this respect, one could for instance look at the transfer market for football players, with its periods of shutdown (from the late fifties to the mid-seventies) and its acceleration, which affects all four regions and provides material to explore phenomena such as the shift from amateurism to professional sport; the emergence of specialist exporter regions, with its consequences on emitting societies; or the diffusion of the North-American sporting model. Another example is provided by the effects of the Cold War in its trans-Atlantic dimension (for instance, expressions of the USSR-USA antagonism through the Olympic games), with its potential consequences on the nature and intensity of inter-country relations in this polycentric space.

Bibliografía

Ver en Zotero

- Archambault, Fabien, ed. "L'autre continent du football." Cahiers des Amériques latines 3, no. 74 (2013).
- Archambault, Fabien, and Loïc Artiaga. Double jeu. Le basket-ball entre France et Amériques. Edited by Gérard Bosc. Paris: Vuibert, 2007.
- Bale, John. Sport and Postcolonialism. Edited by Mike Cronin. Oxford: Berg, 2003.
- Beckles, Hilary McD. Liberation Cricket. West Indies Cricket Culture. Edited by Brian Stoddart. Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1995.
- Bjarkman, Peter C. Baseball with a Latin Beat. Jefferson, Londres: McFarland & Co, 1994.
- Black, David R., and John Nauright. Rugby and the South African Nation. Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1998.
- Darbon, Sébastien. Diffusion des sports et impérialisme anglo-saxon. Paris: Éditions de la Maison des sciences de l'homme, 2008.
- Klein, Alan M. Sugarball. The American Game, the Dominican Dream. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1991.
- Krich, John. El Béisbol. Travels through the Pan-American Pastime. New York: Prentice Hall, 1989.
- Lanfranchi, Pierre, and Matthew Taylor. Moving with the Ball. Oxford: Berg, 2001.
- Mangan, James Anthony. Pleasure, Profit, Proselytism. British Culture and Sport at Home and Abroad 1700-1914. Londres: Frank Cass, 1988.
- Mangan, James Anthony. The Cultural Bond. Sport, Empire, Society. Londres: Frank Cass, 1992.
- Mangan, James Anthony. The Games Ethic and Imperialism. Aspects of the Diffusion of an Ideal. Londres: Frank Cass, 1998.
- Markovits, Andrei S., and Steven L. Hellerman. Offside. Soccer and American Exceptionalism. Princeton, Oxford: Princeton University Press, 2001.
- Nauright, John. "Colonial Manhood and Imperial Race Virility : British Response to Post-Boer War Colonial Rugby Tours." In Making Men. Rugby and Masculine Identity, by John Nauright, 121-39. edited by Timothy J. L. Chandler. Londres: Frank Cass, 1996.
- Singaravélou, Pierre. L'Empire des sports. Une histoire de la mondialisation culturelle. Edited by Julien Sorez. Paris: Belin, 2010.
- Stoddart, Brian. The Imperial Game. Cricket, Culture and Society. Edited by Keith A. P. Sandiford. Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1998.
- Szymański, Stefan, and Andrew S. Zimbalist. National Pastime. How Americans Play Baseball and the Rest of the World Plays Soccer. Washington DC: Brookings Institution Press, 2005.
- Wagg, Stephen. East Plays West. Sport and the Cold War. Edited by David L. Andrews. Londres, New York: Routledge, 2007.

Autor

- Fabien Archambault - Université Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne

Ancien élève de l'École normale supérieure de Fontenay/Saint-Cloud (1996), agrégé d'histoire (1999), il a préparé sa thèse, consacrée aux liens entre football et politique en Italie, à l'université de Grenoble II, où il a été allocataire-moniteur puis ATER (2001-2005), puis à l'École française de Rome, dont il a été membre de 2005 à 2008. Il a ensuite été élu maître de conférences en histoire contemporaine à l'université de Limoges (2008), puis à l'université Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne (2020)

A former student of the École normale supérieure de Fontenay/Saint-Cloud (1996) and the holder of an Agrégation in history (1999), he prepared his PhD thesis on Football and Politics in Italy at the University of Grenoble II, then at the École française de Rome of which he was a member from 2005 to 2008. Then elected as an Associate Professor of Contemporary History at the University of Limoges (2008), then at the University Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne (2020)